DES MOINES, IA – The League of United Latin American Citizens of Iowa is warning members of the immigrant community to be on the lookout for potential situations of racial profiling and even possible arrest after several undocumented immigrants have been arrested in the past week.

Almost a dozen Latinos have been pulled over in central Iowa, questioned and then arrested once found to be undocumented. These individuals are being held in the Marshall County Jail. Four other Latinos were arrested at Mills Manufacturing in Earlville, Iowa, on March 1. They are being held at the Linn County Correctional Center.

“We’ve been told by either law enforcement officials or family members, all of whom want to remain anonymous to protect their families, that these individuals were not committing any crimes at the time they were pulled over,” says Joe Enriquez Henry of Des Moines, the National Vice President of the Midwest Region of LULAC. “We believe this is racial profiling in that it targets all Latinos in order to find those who are undocumented.

“What’s even scarier is that Immigration and Customs Enforcement is not required to note the arrest or the detainee’s information on county jail websites, so we have a difficult time finding these individuals once they have been arrested,” he said.

LULAC officials are working with other social justice groups such as American Friends Service Committee and the Eastern Iowa Community Bond Project to raise money for the legal fees and to post bond for the detainees. A hotline has been established in central Iowa to provide legal support to those facing deportation: 515-996-0003.

Anyone would who like to donate to provide bail assistance for those detained in the eastern Iowa should go to www.communitybondproject.org. The Eastern Iowa Community Bond Project is in the process of becoming a charitable organization that can accept tax-deductible donations. Email info@communitybondproject.org for more information.

The League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) is the nation’s largest and oldest civil rights volunteer-based organization that empowers Hispanic Americans and builds strong Latino communities. LULAC’s programs, services and advocacy address the most important issues for Latinos, meeting critical needs of today and the future.
